 DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

On the northeast corner of First and George Streets stands a two and one-half story stucco building which stands in the same location as the former livery stables which were part of the Harriott Hotel around the turn of the century. This building was constructed fairly recently compared to the other structures in town.

It is a three bay long, three bay deep building with a hip roof leanto or shed addition on the west end of the building. The doors are located on First Street and the addition is adjacent George Street. The opposite side of the building faces the Canal.

The building has 3/1 sash on both storys with brown trim in contrast to the tan stucco. A large shed dormer extends most the distance of the 'A' roof. Its walls are covered with white aluminum siding and the roof itself is covered with dark brown asphalt shingle. A wooden stair rises from the sidewalk over the roof of the west wing to the third story which apparently is a seperate apartment.

Another wood stair ascends on the east gable to the second story.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

"The Stable property" as this is called in old deeds was exactly that, a stable for horses belonging to hotel guests, and livery horses to rent to hotel guests. This remained a part of the Bayard House property until 1930 when a sheriffs sale was held to satisfy a mortgage. The "stable property" brought $650.00 at the auction.

Most of the travelers coming to Chesapeake City before the advent of the railroads came by water and had to be transported from the boat landing to the hotel and on to the next boat landing by stage coach. The horses for these conveyances were kept here. Before the canal was widened, there was a wide space between the canal and the stable buildings.

When horses were no longer necessary for transportation, the buildings on this lot adjusted accordingly. A poolroom was located here and a restaurant. Now an apartment building and parking space for tenants occupy the lot.

The property is significant in the development of transportation and commerce in town, however it has little architectural merit, especially in light of the fact that has little of antiquity, other than the general form.
